John Grant

Born: 1950

Carbine Club Member since: 2016

John is an Australian businessman, rugby league football administrator and former chairman of the Australian Rugby League Commission.

A former player of the 1970s, he was a Queensland interstate representative three-quarter back and a member of the Australian team in the 1972 World Cup against Great Britain in France.

John had been playing his club football for the Brisbane Rugby League's Souths club under Wayne Bennett. Following the World Cup, Grant joined English club Warrington, playing for them during their table-topping 1972–73 season.

Grant had completed an engineering degree at the University of Queensland before taking up a scholarship with Brisbane City Council.

He went on to head the information technology company Data3 and become chairman of the Australian Information Industry Association

In 2011 Grant was named as the inaugural chairman of the Australian Rugby League Commission.

The 2012 NRL season was the Commission's first in control of the League.
